KINGFISHER A POWERFUL BIRD

Turtle's Shell More Than One-Eighth of an Inch Thick Was Pierced by the Beak.

"You'd be surprised to know how birds of prey hover over the hatchery grounds of the millions of young fish hatched there," said Jeremiah Berkhaus, superintendent of the Pennsylvania state hatchery. "There are half a dozen species of aerial pirates, but about the worst are kingfishers. I knew that the kingfishers could strike a fish a terrific blow with its beak, but I was really surprised to learn just how terrific the blow was. A few days ago I saw one of these birds resting in a 50-foot tree over one of the pools of the hatchery, but before I could get my gun to shoot it, it made a dive into the pond and a moment later arose with a large mud turtle. The bird slowly winged its way to the tree, but before it reached its resting place I shot it. It fell to the ground with the turtle. I examined the turtle and where the beak of the kingfisher had struck it, I found a small round hole which the point of its beak had broken through. Measuring the thickness of the turtle's shell I found that it was a little more than one-eighth of an inch and hard and bony. A kingfisher will eat twenty or thirty good-sized fish a day, so you can see they are very destructive. Blue heron, bittern and fish hawks are especially destructive to the young trout and young fish. I have shot many of these birds and am compelled to go around with a shotgun almost continually."

RIDDLE OF RADIUM.

Among scientists, says Popular Mechanics, it is very generally conceded that the discovery of radium gave to the world one of its most interesting and unique riddles. After all the "cranks," as well as geniuses, had failed to produce a perpetual motion machine; after all the alchemists and their scientific successors, the chemists, had failed to change any single chemical element into another, and the world had settled down to the belief in the impossibility of achieving either of these aims; the discovery of the phenomena of radioactivity seemed to show the fallacy of the conclusions in both cases.
